Real Leaders Don't Do PowerPoint: How to Sell Yourself and Your Ideas By Christopher Witt, Dale Fetherling

Think about the most powerful speech you've ever heard a leader give. What made that speech—and that speaker—memorable was likely a mix of authenticity, stage presence, masterful delivery, and—above all—an inspirational message.

Nobody ever walked out of a great speech saying, “I loved the way she used PowerPoint.” Yet, all too often, speakers rely on tools like it to carry them through a presentation.

Real leaders speak to make a difference, to promote a vision, to change the way people think and feel and act. Their ability to lead goes hand in hand with their ability to get their message across, no matter what size audience they're addressing. Drawing on his years of experience in coaching executives, Christopher Witt shows not just how to make a speech but why and when you should make one. His practical advice on how to take your game to the next level includes:

- You are the message. Who you are—your character, experience, values—shapes the message your listeners hear.
- Content is king. Delivery is important, but it is only the helpful—or unhelpful—servant of your message. So build each speech around one, and only one, “Big Idea.”
- A confused mind always says no. When you want your listeners to say yes, you've got to make them understand what you want them to do and why they should care.
- Dare to do the unexpected. Leaders know the rules, and they know when, why, and how to break them.

In chapters that can be read in five minutes or less and in a book that can be gone through in one sitting, Witt shows you how to become more confident, more commanding, more compelling speakers. But this isn't just a book about speaking. It's about leadership and about how people—CEOs and PTA presidents, small business owners and sales reps, middle managers and techno geeks—can present themselves and their ideas with greater impact.

Editorial Review

From Publishers Weekly

In Witt's succinct and humorous assessment of leadership strategies and the art of the public presentation, the business consultant focuses on the basics and the particulars that often go by the wayside when speakers rely on crutches like PowerPoint. A good speaker and leader knows that the individual is inseparable from his or her message, that ideas must be conveyed simply and powerfully, and that conviction is paramount to get others on board. Witt, founder and president of his own Witt Communications company, goes into great detail illustrating exactly what a successful speaker does and how those skills translate to good leadership. While Witt's primer doesn't say anything particularly new, it's a fine demonstration of his principles at work: well-organized and straightforward, with plenty of concrete take-away techniques. Geared toward those looking to get a leg up at work, shape their ideas and overcome the public speaking jitters, Witt's quick, witty instructional makes a fine addition to the office arsenal.

By gearing his expertise to leaders who must wean themselves from PowerPoint and similar business crutches, communications consultant Witt (with the help of Fetherling) has struck figurative gold. As organizational representatives, crisis managers, major influencers, and the source of inspiration, executives have no choice but to master presence. The four elements of Demosthenes' great speeches act as a fulcrum: great person, noteworthy occasion, compelling message, and masterful delivery. And the author follows those points faithfully, presenting his case in short chapters, with plenty of well-recognized examples (Ronald Reagan, Martin Luther King Jr., and Sojourner Truth) and with easy-to-understand principles. On anyone's list of favorites is learn how to chunk your content, show and tell, and deliver the real you. Although this won't write your next speech, it will help you begin to incorporate powerful words married with the right kind of tone and body language. --Barbara Jacobs
